Jim's glad to work in a smoke-free environment

Like most of us, Jim our 'Mashman' knows that smoke can affect our sense of taste. Which is why at Glengoyne our malted barley is dried without peat smoke. After all, everything we do adds flavour to our whisky – from the coaxing of the spirit through the stills at a rate much slower than any other distillery, to maturation in sherry casks for no less than 10 years – it would be a crime if we didn't allow you to taste it properly.

Some may call us old fashioned, but the nine men who've spent a lifetime perfecting the art of whisky making in our distillery, close to the banks of Loch Lomond, think that when you drink malt whisky you should taste the subtle complexity of its natural flavours.
